Operations Review 2026 — demo document containing both text and images

This document is a fictional operations review created to test how a PDF containing embedded charts behaves when it is converted to Markdown. It deliberately mixes three kinds of content: flowing paragraph text, a data table, and raster images that carry information found nowhere in the text.

1. Regional performance

Revenue growth in the second half of the year was driven primarily by the North American division, where the consolidated route optimisation programme reached full deployment across all eleven distribution centres. The European division recovered more slowly, held back by a prolonged industrial dispute at two coastal terminals during the third quarter.

The figure above shows the quarterly split. The crossover in the third quarter is the single most important signal in this report, and it appears only in the chart — no sentence in this document states the individual quarterly values.

Region	FY2025	FY2026	Change
North America	$241M	$275M	+14.1%

Europe	$218M	$243M	+11.5%
Asia Pacific	$97M	$131M	+35.1%

2. Service quality

On-time delivery is the group's primary customer-facing quality metric. Performance improved steadily through the year, crossing the internal target threshold for the first time in July and holding above it for most of the remaining period.

Two observations follow from the trend. First, the improvement is gradual rather than stepwise, which is consistent with process change rather than a one-off correction. Second, the dip in June coincides with the terminal dispute described in section 1.

3. Outlook

Management expects the Asia Pacific division to contribute a materially larger share of group revenue in the coming year, subject to the completion of the Singapore hub expansion. Capital expenditure guidance is unchanged. The board will review the dividend policy at the interim results in line with the capital allocation framework adopted last year.
